...I have not abandoned my faith in humanity. Mankind may err. But mankind is still the only source upon which we can depend for social regeneration. If the unstable condition of the world today is directly attributable to human failure, the stabilisation of society can be accompanied through intelligent human effort. As social idealists we are faced with a tremendous task — a task which is by no means lightened by the apathy and pessimism of so many of our fellow men. But I am firmly convinced that if thought ... could be given to morally creative efforts towards mobilisation for social welfare, our problem would be solved ... if we can play but a small part in this process, our training here shall not be in vain.

Clifford Manshardt, Founder-Director, TISS, June 20, 1938.
